According to the Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary, to plagiarize is

“the act of using another person's words or ideas without giving credit to that person”

kidshealth.org

- the act of using another person's words or ideas without giving credit to that person
- To pass off the ideas or words of another as one's own
- to use another's production without crediting the source
- to commit literary theft
- to present as new and original an idea or product derived from an existing source

cite your sources

- both within the body of your paper
- and in a bibliography of sources you use at the end of your paper

Why cite?

We asked 20 U of T instructors and administrators why it's important for students to understand how to cite sources. This is what they told us.

Future source consultation by readers

Future source consultation by the author

Fact checking

Respect the academic community's rules/practices

Show that journals aren't web pages – they're published, numbered, organized

Separate amateurs from professionals

Show students that referencing has to be accurate & consistent to be helpful

Demonstrate author credibility

Show the diversity – depth - breadth of sources consulted

Strengthen author's arguments

Show how different articles build a single argument

Demonstrate independent thinking by students

KINDS OF PLAGIARISM

Intentional Plagiarism

Rewriting from books or articles

Copying and pasting from webpages to create a patchwork writing

Buying, downloading or borrowing a paper

Unintentional Plagiarism

Not knowing when and how to cite

Not knowing how to paraphrase

Not knowing what “common knowledge” means

Recycling an old paper

You read:

Technology has significantly transformed education at several major turning points in our history. In the broadest sense, the first technology was the primitive modes of communication used by prehistoric people before the development of spoken language. Mime, gestures, grunts, and drawing of figures in the sand with a stick were methods used to communicate -- yes, even to educate.

You write:

In the early 1980s, the Reagan Administration made increasing use of Honduras as a base for the contra war. The Administration set up a number of military and training facilities--some American, some contra, and some housing Argentine mercenaries--along the border between Nicaragua and Honduras. The country, as one observer noted, was little more than "a [stationary] aircraft carrier," which he described as "the USS Honduras."²

Common knowledge

As a general rule, a fact can be said to be 'common knowledge' when:

- it is widely accessible
- it is likely to be known by a lot of people
- it can be found in a general reference resource, such as a dictionary or encyclopedia.

But when in doubt, cite!

Is it plagiarism?

Citing/Referencing

Citing

In-text citations are used when directly quoting or paraphrasing a source. They are located in the body of the work and contain a fragment of the full citation.

A complete list of all the citations used in your text will need to be provided at the end of your assignment. This is called your reference list or bibliography and needs to be presented in alphabetical author/originator order.

Referencing

Citation Styles

- APA. APA is an author/date based style. This means emphasis is placed on the author and the date of a piece of work to uniquely identify it.
- MLA. MLA is most often applied by the arts and humanities, particularly in the USA. It is arguably the most well used of all of the citation styles.
- Harvard. Harvard is very similar to APA. Where APA is primarily used in the USA, Harvard referencing is the most well used referencing style in the UK and Australia, and is encouraged for use with the humanities.
- Vancouver. The Vancouver system is mainly used in medical and scientific papers.
- Chicago and Turabian. These are two separate styles but are very similar, just like Harvard and APA. These are widely used for history and economics.
